

Overseas Investment (Urgent Measures) Amendment Bill

Government Bill

As reported from the Finance and Expenditure Committee

Commentary

Recommendation

The Finance and Expenditure Committee has examined the Overseas Investment (Urgent Measures) Amendment Bill and recommends by majority that it be passed with the amendments shown.

Introduction

This omnibus bill is one of two bills designed to improve New Zealand's foreign investment screening regime and respond to the COVID-19 pandemic. The second bill—the Overseas Investment Amendment Bill (No 3)—proposes other measures that are less time-sensitive.

The bill seeks to amend the Overseas Investment Act 2005 to ensure that risks posed by foreign investment are effectively managed, particularly during the ongoing economic fallout from COVID-19. Declining business values create the potential for overseas investors to acquire ownership or control of business assets without government scrutiny. One aim of the bill is to strengthen the Government's ability to manage both the temporarily heightened risks that are posed by foreign investment during this period, and those that exist on an enduring basis.

The Government aims to strengthen the overseas investment regime through this bill by three major changes. Firstly, the bill would introduce a national interest test. This would allow the Government to deny consent to any investment ordinarily screened under the Act that is deemed contrary to New Zealand's national interest. Guidance on what the Government would consider under the national interest test is available on Treasury's website.

The bill would also introduce a temporary emergency notification power. This would allow the Government to review certain controlling investment not ordinarily screened under the Act. If necessary, the bill would empower the Government to impose conditions on, prohibit, or dispose of those investments if they are contrary to New Zealand's national interest. The power would be reviewed every 90 days and removed once COVID-19 and its associated economic effects are no longer having a significant impact on New Zealand.

Finally, the bill would introduce a national security and public order call-in power. This would replace the above emergency notification power, when it is removed. It would empower the Government to review certain investments in strategically important businesses that are not ordinarily screened under the Act, and impose conditions on, prohibit, or dispose of those investments that pose a significant risk to national security or public order (that is, broader national interest considerations could not be taken into account).

The bill also has the concurrent aim of supporting productive foreign investment. It would do this by reducing unnecessary regulatory costs on investors. This recognises that such costs reduce New Zealand's attractiveness to the productive investment needed to support firms during the COVID-19 economic fallout.

The bill is in two parts. Part 1 would amend the Overseas Investment Act (the Act), while Part 2 would amend the Anti-Money Laundering and Countering Financing of Terrorism Act 2009, the Fisheries Act 1996, and the Tax Administration Act 1994.

The use of regulations in the amended overseas investment regime

Some of the specific details of changes to the Act will be implemented through regulations, and most of these regulations would be empowered by this bill. As a part of our consideration of this bill, we received advice from the Regulations Review Committee.

A majority of us are satisfied that the use of regulations empowered by the bill would be an appropriate delegation of Parliament's law-making power. All regulations empowered by the bill would be subject to the usual parliamentary scrutiny of secondary legislation, and would therefore be disallowable and subject to presentation requirements.

The Regulations Review Committee advised us that they were concerned with the use of regulations empowered by clause 25, new section 126(2)(o). This provision empowers regulators to add agencies to a list of agencies that may share information for the purpose of managing certain risks. They were concerned that the power of regulators would not be circumscribed in any way. The bill as introduced provides no criteria that an agency would need to meet before it was added to the list.

However, we recommend a change to the bill (discussed below), whereby regulators would have to consult with the Privacy Commissioner before adding any agencies to this list. This will help ensure that if any agencies are added to this list, it would be done in accordance with the best practice regarding information sharing between government agencies.

Proposed amendments

This commentary covers the main amendments we recommend to the bill as introduced. We do not discuss minor or technical amendments.

Recommended changes related to the emergency notification power, the national interest test, and the permanent call-in power

Establishing a Ministerial review of the scope of the emergency notification power

The bill as introduced would temporarily establish an emergency notification regime (new Part 3, subpart 1). It would empower the Government to review all new controlling transactions by overseas persons in New Zealand businesses and assets. This is an expansion of the current notification regime, which in general terms only applies to transactions of at least $100 million.

The emergency notification regime is deliberately very broad. It recognises the potential for the value of distressed firms, during the ongoing economic fallout of COVID-19, to drop to extremely low levels. Investments in certain strategically important businesses, such as developers of military technology, may pose significant risks irrespective of their value.

We note that this creates a risk that the emergency power may over-capture low-risk transactions. Submitters expressed concern that the wide scope of this notification regime could discourage productive investments, or could result in delays to the processing of applications.

National Party members agree with that concern and believe there should be a threshold under which the notification regime is not required. New Zealand's economic recovery depends on private sector investment: this regime, with no threshold, would make it harder for many businesses to get access to the capital they need to survive or rebuild, and save jobs.

Government members note, however, that the bill already has several provisions that mitigate this risk.

The mitigating provisions in the bill include statutory timeframes, allowing low-risk transactions to proceed quickly, and the fact that the emergency power will be removed once the economic fallout of COVID-19 ceases to have a significant impact in New Zealand.

We recommend inserting clause 52, new section 86, to require the Minister responsible for the Act to assess whether the emergency power is over-capturing low-risk transactions, and if so, to consider any available options to mitigate this. We recommend that this process occur after at least 45 days, so as to ensure that sufficient data is available to support any assessments made by the Minister.

Limiting the use of the call-in power and the emergency notification power

Under proposed new section 82(1)(b), transactions that have required consent would be excluded from the temporary emergency notification regime, and from the call-in power once that regime replaces the temporary emergency notification power.

Some submitters were concerned that it was not sufficiently clear whether, if consent was granted for a series of transactions, they would be excluded from the call-in or emergency notification powers.

We recommend inserting new section 85(1) to make it clear that a transaction which requires consent would not also be considered under the emergency notification or call-in regimes.

How strategically important businesses will be defined

The bill as introduced would identify a number of strategically important businesses (clause 6(2), amended section 6(1)). Regulations would then be used to provide more detailed definitions of those strategically important businesses.

Some submitters are concerned that the empowering provision allowing for these regulations could inadvertently capture businesses that are merely “involved in” a strategically important business. For example, it could capture a cleaning service at Auckland Airport.

We recommend amending the definition of strategically important business, by amending clause 6(2), new section 6(1) of the bill. This will make it clear that only those entities referred to in the regulations would be considered strategically important businesses. That is, any business that was not specifically listed in the regulations would not come under the definition of a strategically important business.

Critical direct suppliers

Clause 17 of the bill as introduced, inserting section 20D, would establish a list of critical direct suppliers who would always be subject to the regime established by this bill.

We recommend amending the bill by inserting new subsection 20D(4) so that if someone ceased to be considered a critical direct supplier, the Minister would be obliged to inform them of this fact. Once this occurs, their name should be removed from the list.

Direction orders

Clause 52, new section 88, would establish a regime whereby the Minister could grant direction orders that allow an investor to proceed with the call-in transaction. The provision would also grant the Minister the power to apply conditions to the direction order so as to manage risks to the national interest, or to national security or public order.

For the majority of direction orders there would be no risks to manage. We recommend amending proposed section 88(1) to clearly state that a direction order could simply be a clearance to proceed without conditions. These orders would permit transactions by an investor to proceed unfettered.

Statutory declarations for notifications under emergency powers

Clause 52, new section 87, would require that a notification made under the emergency notification regime be signed and accompanied by a statutory declaration, unless waived by the regulator.

Submitters believed this would create an unnecessary burden on investors, without any clear benefit for the regime. It would also limit the extent to which a notification could be made solely online.

We propose amending clause 52, new section 87, so that a statutory declaration would only be necessary when there is information that needed to be verified. If this were the case, the regulator would need to explicitly request a declaration. We also propose removing the requirement that a notification be signed by an investor.

Content and form of a notification

The bill as introduced provides that information requirements for notifications can be set by regulation. We note that, although regulations are more flexible than legislation, they cannot be amended with sufficient speed so as to support the efficient operation of the emergency notification regime.

Also, because this provision only refers to “information” in a notification, it would not permit the regulator to control the form of a notification. This would prevent the regulator from establishing an online portal, so as to support an online notification process.

We recommend amending clause 52, new section 87(1), so that the Minister could authorise the manner in which notifications were made under the emergency power. This would include both the information required, and the method by which it is provided to the regulator. We believe this would allow the regime sufficient flexibility to function as an efficient, easy-to-use system.

Publication requirements for Ministerial decisions

Clause 52, new section 129, would require the Minister to publish decisions relating to the exercise of the national interest test, the emergency notification power, and the permanent call-in power. This is to promote transparency regarding the use of Ministerial powers relating to this bill, so as to encourage the prudent exercise of these powers by the Minister.

As introduced, this provision would also require the publication of direction orders that simply permitted transactions to proceed unfettered. This is a drafting error. Transparency in such cases would provide little additional public benefit, as there would be little interest in an investor reviewing such decisions. The obligation would also be an additional administrative burden for the Overseas Investment Office.

We recommend amending clause 52, new section 129(1A), so that publication requirements would not apply by default to transactions that are allowed to proceed unfettered under the emergency notification power and the permanent call-in power.

Acquisition of non-critical assets

The acquisition of any asset used by a strategically important business would be subject to the permanent call-in power under clause 53(4), new section 82.

Submitters were concerned that this would be an unnecessary overreach of the Government's power to oversee such transactions, because many would be low risk. We agree that the acquisition of non-core, minor, or easily replaceable assets should not be subject to this power.

We recommend amending proposed new section 127 to include a power to make regulations prescribing transactions that would not be considered overseas investments in strategically important businesses' assets. Such transactions would not be subject to the call-in power.

Protection of personal information

During our consideration of this bill we received a submission from the Privacy Commissioner, who raised several issues which we discuss below.

Establishing the threshold by which this bill would enable government agencies to share information

Clause 52, new section 126, states that information could be shared between government agencies when "necessary or desirable" for managing national security and public order risks associated with transactions by overseas persons.

This provision would act as an exception to the standard restrictions on information sharing between government agencies. Therefore, we believe it is important to establish a high threshold before such information sharing can occur. Necessity is the usual test that would need to be reached for information to be shared between government agencies.

Accordingly, we recommend amending new section 126 by removing the words "or desirable".

Further governance over information sharing

As introduced clause 52, new section 126, does not prescribe a suitable governance structure for the use of information sharing between government agencies.

We recommend inserting section 126(3A) to provide for regulations that would govern the use of information sharing.

We also recommend inserting section 126(3B) to specify that the Privacy Commissioner must be consulted before making regulations relating to the government agencies that can be added to the list of agencies that may share information.

The regulations could cover such matters as the type of information that can be shared, and any conditions of sharing such as a maximum retention period, security measures, and setting limits on the further disclosure of information gathered under this regime. We believe that our proposed changes would help ensure that the bill is consistent with best practice for information retention by government agencies.

Information may be disclosed only for the purpose for which it was gathered

We accept that clause 52, new section 126, does not include suitable safeguards for the use of the information gathered under this regime. In his submission, the Privacy Commissioner pointed to the principle that information should only be used by an agency for purposes that are directly related to the reason for which it was gathered.

Therefore, information disclosed under these arrangements should only be used for the purpose of managing national security and public order risks in relation to overseas investment.

We recommend amending this provision by inserting clause 52, new section 126(2A), so that the accessing agency could use the information only in accordance with the purpose for which it was originally accessed.

Exemptions to the regime

Exemptions for loans from financial institutions

As introduced, clause 49(2), new section 61B(c)(iva), provides that exemptions could be granted for loans from financial institutions. This would ensure that loans are not captured by the regime as amended by this bill.

This provision exists because loans are a particularly important class of asset to support businesses. The time and cost it would take to obtain consent could have a chilling effect on the lending market. Loan availability and accessibility will be a crucial part of New Zealand's economic recovery.

We note that exempting loans under this regime would suggest that, previously, loans were captured by the Act. However, there was considerable ambiguity in the market as to whether this was so.

There should be no need to exempt loans from this regime if, in fact, they do not amount to "property" or "security". Therefore, we recommend changing the bill to expressly state that originating loans do not require consent under the Act. This would avoid creating uncertainty about the legality of previous transactions.

Given we are clarifying that loan origination has a blanket exclusion from the overseas investment regime, we recommend deleting clause 49(2), proposed section 61B(c)(iva), so that the provision would not reference financial institutions.

The bill would also be amended, recognising the importance of lending to New Zealand's economy, to provide a standing consent for any subsequent transfer or sale on the secondary market. Such transfers currently require consent.

Exemption-making power for residential mortgage obligations

Clause 49(3), new section 61B(c)(ix), would provide for an exemption-making power for residential mortgage obligations.

The bill as introduced provides this exemption only if it would “support the issuance or management” of a residential mortgage obligation. This would clearly cover circumstances in which the loan originator sold mortgage loans to the issuing entity. However, the bill does not provide for some circumstances; for example, a situation in which a loan originator repurchased the financial assets from the issuing entity.

It would be inconsistent with the Government’s position if the entity that initially acquired the mortgage could not repurchase the same mortgage without enjoying the exemption benefits afforded to other such transactions. We therefore recommend inserting clause 49, new section 61B(c)(ix), which would add wording to this provision in order to clearly address the above situation.

Definition of an overseas person

Clause 5 of the companion bill to this one (the Overseas Investment Amendment Bill (No 3)) would define an overseas person in relation to overseas investment. This definition is incorporated into this bill by means of a standing consent in clause 31 of Schedule 1AA which effectively defines an overseas person for the purposes of this regime.

The proposed definition of an overseas person does not include non-incorporated listed issuers. As a result, the definition would not apply to listed issuers that are not bodies corporate.

We recommend amending clause 31, Schedule 1AA, Part 4. This would include listed managed investment schemes that fulfil the eligibility criteria for the exemption for non-listed managed investment schemes outlined in the regulations disclosure document, with the permanent change also reflected in the Overseas Investment Amendment Bill (No 3).

For clarity, this would mean that listed managed investment schemes would receive a standing consent for transactions that were ordinarily subject to the Act provided two circumstances applied. The first is where not more than 50 percent of the value of the investment products in the managed investment scheme was invested on behalf of overseas persons. The second is where not more than 25 percent of the value of the investment products in the managed investment scheme was invested on behalf of overseas persons, each of whom have 10 percent or more of the managed investment scheme’s value invested.

Amendments to transitional arrangements

The emergency power does not operate retrospectively

Schedule 1AA of the bill does not make it clear whether transactions would need to be notified under the emergency power if they were not ordinarily screened under the Act, and were entered into before this bill would take effect, but not completed until after it takes effect. Submitters were concerned that, if those transactions were subject to notification requirements, the emergency powers would be operating retrospectively.

The emergency power would not operate retrospectively. However, to provide certainty to investors, we recommend inserting clause 24, Schedule 1AA, Part 3, to make it clear that transactions entered into prior to the emergency power taking effect do not need to be notified.

Consent for low-risk transactions

Transactions that receive a standing consent under the bill are those that have been judged by the Government to be low risk. As introduced, the bill would require transactions that are in the process of being completed when the new rules take effect, to get consent. However, this does not increase the risks associated with foreign investment during COVID-19. We accept that it would be an unnecessary burden on the Overseas Investment Office for it to process these low-risk transactions. It would also increase the cost for investors.

We recommend a change to the bill by amending clause 15, Schedule 1AA, new Part 3, so that transactions involving overseas persons or sensitive adjoining land that would receive standing consents under the bill do not need to go through the process of receiving consent for those transactions.

We further recommend a change to the bill by amending clauses 24 and 32B, Schedule 1AA, to clarify that overseas persons that would have a standing consent under the bill should also not be subject to the emergency notification power or call-in power under this bill. This is consistent with the Government's intention that those investors should be considered New Zealand entities for the purposes of the Overseas Investment Amendment Bill (No 3).
